

Find Your Career Interest

Before you start looking for a job, think about your career first. Choosing a career means more than finding a means of making a living. Your work will determine many aspects of your daily activities, so you are in fact choosing your future way of life.

Before you start your job search, you have to take into consideration different factors:

How do you currently spend your time and energy?

What do you enjoy doing and what you are good at?

What do you value most: developing your potential, becoming an expert, serving the community, taking care of your family and friends, making a lot of money or gaining status and prestige?

The first step of career planning is to assess your interests, values, skills and personality traits. Self assessment is a process by which you learn more about yourself. A good self understanding can help you determine which occupations and work situations could better fit you. DON'T be forced by the market to take up jobs you don't like. Build your career around your interest and abilities.

Following are the names of different professions. You can read the names one by one and think careful which profession attracts your attention the most. If you want a better assessment of your career interest, you can reserve a session with our social worker or career advisor.

Athletic Coaching	Life Science	Physical science
Business	Management	Politician
Creative Arts	Manual Labor	Protective
Creative Writing	Mathematics	Religious Activities
Engineering	Medical Service	Sales
Family Activity	Outdoor-Agriculture	Skilled Trades
Finance	Office Work	Social Sciences
Human Resource Management	Performing Arts	Social Service
Information Technology	Personal service	Teaching
Law	Physical/Risk-Taking	Technical Writing